Two Months of Italians' Slow Progress in Ethiopia

The relatively slow progress which Italy's invading armies have made in the first two months of their Ethiopian conquest is shown by this map. Since Oct. 2, when the Italians first pushed over the border from Assab, they have advanced about 80 miles in the northern area and about 125 miles in the south, though bombing planes and reconnoitering forces have made deeper forays. Slowness of the campaign is regarded responsible for Marshal Pietro Badoglio's taking over chief command from Gen. Emilio de Bono. Absence of any major battles in the first two months indicates Ethiopians are adhering to their announced plan of drawing the invaders into the interior with little resistance until the Italians reach points for the best defense by untrained warriors.
